

Tuesday, November 1, 2016

OKC Looks For Input From Residents About City Roads

BY KARL TORP, NEWS 9

OKLAHOMA CITY - There's another national survey out that ranks Oklahoma City has having some of the worst roads in the country.

If you agree, the City wants to hear from you.

A study just released by a national transportation research group ranks Oklahoma City as having the eighth worst streets in the nation and the worst when it comes to repair costs.

The group said folks in Oklahoma City spend on average of $1,025 in repairs every year.

Oklahoma City has started asking residents to fill out online surveys to best determined what will do into next year's bond election.

"We expect streets to be a large part," said Oklahoma City Public Information and Marketing Director Kristy Yager.

The surveys are available until Feb 28 at <https://www.okc.gov/residents/2017-bond-election>.