The Washington Post is providing an afternoon e-newsletter to keep you up-to-date on the news that has occurred since you received your morning paper. This is just one of the many benefits you get as a home delivery subscriber, courtesy of PostPoints, the reader rewards program from The Washington Post. If you do not wish to receive Afternoon Buzz, click here to unsubscribe.

Today’s News Update

Senate committee votes to require non-invasive ultrasounds before abortions

Anita Kumar
A Senate committee voted Thursday morning to require women to undergo external ultrasounds before abortions.

Sky-high crane operator watches Washington economy come back to life

Steve Hendrix
Washington crane operator Tim Reese went more than a year without work in a sky-high rig. But now the pace of building is picking up, and Reese is back in the saddle.

- What the view looks like from high above
- Crane operator: "The view is spectacular"

More fatal accidents among older drivers, report finds

Ashley Halsey III
As the nation’s overall highway fatality rate declines, there is an increase among the growing number of older drivers. As more baby boomers join the ranks of the elderly, the problem is forecast to increase.