

New Study Finds CA Motorists Shelling Out $61 Billion Due to Bad Roads, Traffic

August 15, 2018

(KNX 1070) - California drivers are losing time, money and lives driving on bad roads.

A new study from the research firm TRIP finds California motorists are shelling out an extra $61 billion a year because of bad roads, serious accidents, and traffic congestion.

In Los Angeles, spokesman Rocky Moretti says drivers give up 82 hours every year in bumper to bumper traffic.

Our cars are also taking a financial hit every time we drive on rough roads.

According to the study, Los Angeles and San Francisco had the highest overall cost and worst traffic congestion in the state.
